Who of all the millions who use spectacles can tell me the story of Spina's life? O ungrateful and ungenerous mortals! You write the biographies and cherish the memories of "the plat-ters and disturbers of the world," but know nothing of and care nothing for, J E W E L R Y the best and truest benefactor of the

This Pisan monk—this Alexander de Spina—must have been (1 maintain) a Spina—must have been (I maintain) a loving and lovable person, and a favorite with all in the Abby, from the mighty abbott to the humble portor. Although he devoutly said his "holy things" each mora and eventide, he evidently believed that the best way to make himself acceptable to the Lord was to do something to benefit his follow men. Methinks I behold him paintail on the control of the cont fully and thoughtfully observing the vain and frutile attempts a venerable old menk is making to see the letters of

Is there not, he wonders, something in Gad's wonderful world which will help the impaired vision or brighten the blurred and misty page? At last, after years of study and prayer and experiment—just as his own sight is grow-pariment—just as his own sight is grow-pariment.

Spina's invention was regarded as a verifical godsend. It was described and commended in the pulpit. At his success St. Clare hung his head in shame, and from that day to this has had but few worshipers or believers.

The invention of spectacles removed one of the greatest terrors of old age. It can get direct from the manufacturers, the county was andly closed book, and set many an idle pen in motion. It put needles into old willing hands, and therewith happiness into old hearts. It hardly seems possible, and yet it is undoubtedly the fact, that manking had

CHARLES WYMAN. old poet used them when writing the Canterbury Tales. Shakespeare could have said with his own Benedick, "I can see yet without spectacles." But if he had lived to a ripe old age, he would probably have written new Hamlets and Macbeths by their help. Good old Bishop Hall wore glasses, and wrote a pious meditation on them. Swift foolishly vowed never to use spectacles. Rough old Johnson, though he did not wear them, mentioned the name of their inventor with reverence as one of the greatest benefactors to society. Burke rarely appeared in public without glasses. In Gillray's earleatures, you see this mighty rhetorician with spectacles on nose, and arms uplifted, hurling a thunderboit of eloquence at the members of the opposition. If Spina, or somebody else, had not invented spectacles, Disraeli could not have written "The Curiosities of Literature." Wordsworth, in his later years, was greatly beholden to glasses. When Emerson saw him, in 1833, he was disfigured with green goggles. Twas through a pair of green spectacles that Thackeray looked upon life, and saw and noted the sins and sorrows of "Vanity Franklin's spectacles, as some biographer or other has remarked, were were not such spectacles as were sold by the opticians of London and Paris, but were made expressly, for bir were made expressly for him, according to a theory of his own. In travelling, he carried two pair of glasses; "one for reading, the other for surveying distant objects." Franklin could have written Franklin could have written eloquently and appreciatively of spectacles. They were the best and most trusted friends of his vigorous and beautiful old age. He evidently took pride in 'them, and loved to appear in the gay salons of Paris with "the spectacles of wisdom on his nose." — Attantic

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN DENTIS.
The attention of the public is called to a great discovery in Dentistry.

The allocation of the public is called to a great discovery in Dentistry.

THE GREATEST ADVANCE STEP EVER MADE IN THE ART.

The main difficulty in wearing striketal teeth is, they do not hold in their place firmly enough, and add to this the aumoyance of food getting under the plate while eating. I have discovered a method of so constructing the plate on which the teeth are set that they will not start or drop while eating or speaking, neither will any particles of food get under the plate, no matter what the condition of the mouth is, which is not true of any method hithertonised.

I have secured Leiters Patent for the United States, Eagland and France.

The improvement is not in material, but is the construction, which is not in material, but is the construction, which is cave it at almospheric pressure on the entire plate.

Thave send the exclusive of said improvement to Dr. J. Gilman, to wit, the Counties of Franklin, Washington, Chitenden, Lamoulle and Grand Ide. Those wishing to zend the reselves of such improvement, will call on
